The PhD in Policy Analysis Information Session

Saturday, October 23, 2010; 10:00am – 12:00 pm

RAND Pittsburgh Office, 4570 Fifth Avenue, Suite 600
Pittsburgh, PA

You are invited to attend an Information Session for the Pardee RAND Graduate School PhD Program, to be held on Saturday, October 23, 2010, from 10am -12 noon. This session will provide an overview of the program, admissions process, and degree requirements.

About PRGS

Founded in 1970, the Pardee RAND Graduate School uses a multidisciplinary curriculum that emphasizes research methods drawn from mathematics, economics and the social sciences. Students and faculty examine a wide range of policy issues including health, education, energy, environmental issues, public safety, labor, population and workforce demographics, as well as national and international security. PRGS students also work on active RAND policy research projects. This requirement, known as "On-the-Job Training," ensures that graduates are exposed to a wide variety of policy areas, research methods, colleagues, and clients. By the time they graduate, most fellows have accumulated the equivalent of at least two years of job experience in policy analysis and policy consulting.
